Campus planners hold firm to MU building traditions

The sprawling academic core of MU's campus is characterized by a unique blend of historic and modern architecture. This architectural tapestry reflects the university's commitment to preserving its past while simultaneously embracing new constructions. The university's campus master plan, drawn up in 1970, envisions a "prairie campus" where a sense of place and continuity are foundational elements.

"As the campus grows, we must ensure that new buildings integrate seamlessly with the existing fabric," said MU Chancellor Gary Hittorff. "The key is to create a cohesive environment that pays homage to the university's heritage while also accommodating future needs."

One such project is the University Center, which is currently under construction. The center will house administrative offices, a lecture hall, and a range of academic and support services. It is designed to complement the surrounding historic buildings while also offering modern amenities.

"The University Center is a prime example of how we can honor the past while looking forward," said University Architect Sarah Morgan. "It's a project that speaks to the university's commitment to excellence and innovation."
