A master plan is an overall guide. It does not describe specific projects or design details, but rather establishes the larger context for them. Since the Sesquicentennial Plan focuses on campus-wide issues, specific projects are dealt with separately.

At any one time, more than 700 campus improvement projects are in process. The funding for these projects comes from many public and private sources, often in complex combinations. The master plan helps ensure the value of the expended funds and the success and longevity of the projects.

Much improvement has come to the campus in the past few years, with much more under way. Great changes have come to the campus and to the city of Columbia, in the past 30 years, and more change is likely in the coming decades. As the campus grows and changes in all sides of the campus, Missouri must plan carefully for the best use of every square foot of its land, because increased land holdings are not expected.

Independent studies by outside consultants have identified specific needs for many parts of the campus. Program studies are being made for colleges, schools and services to help develop the best match between programs and facilities. As with campus land, campus buildings are under continuous study for optimum efficiency and effectiveness.

The plan seeks to identify the campus' enduring features of design, which are expected to remain unchanged as Missouri continues with the current adjustments to facilities that are characteristic of a large university. The recommendations result from an effort to secure maximum campuswide improvements as simply and quickly as possible, in a manner consistent with University assumptions for limited funding, a limited construction program, a stable population and a permanent campus of great importance. Most complex issues are located in the center of campus, which also offers the greatest opportunity for improvement. Therefore, it has been the focus of attention for the other areas will be treated more fully as the planning process continues.
